

HatTrick Programme

Overview

UEFA HatTrick Programme

For more than 15 years now, UEFA's successful HatTrick programme has had a positive impact on the development of European football, helping to strengthen the roots of the game throughout the continent.

The HatTrick programme was launched during the summer of 2004 for the benefit of UEFA's member associations. Established using revenue from the UEFA European Football Championship (UEFA EURO), it provides them with funding to foster football development at all levels. As suggested by its name, the HatTrick programme comprises three pillars: financial support, education and knowledge-sharing. Since 2019, the education and knowledge-sharing pillars have been administrated by the new UEFA Academy (see www.UEFACademy.com for more information).

Financial support

Financial investment is provided in four-year cycles mirroring each UEFA EURO. The funding is divided into two parts: firstly, an initial contribution aimed at developing and improving football in general, according to the priorities and level of development of the individual UEFA member association; and secondly, an annual solidarity payment to cover designated project administration costs which is accompanied by annual incentive payments to encourage the development of important sectors such as grassroots football, women's football, football and social responsibility, elite youth player development and integrity activities. Each UEFA member association receives the same amount, so funding is not dependent on size or location.

Education

Education programmes have been set up to meet the professional development needs of staff working in football. The UEFA Academy works closely with renowned academic and professional experts to design these programmes, which are divided into three categories. 1) Management programmes offer development opportunities to people working in football at the various stages of their careers, e.g. UEFA Certificate in Football Management (UEFA CFM) and Executive Master in Global Sport Governance (MESGO). 2) Programmes for specialists foster exchanges and discussion between professional experts in a specific area, e.g. UEFA Football Law Programme (UEFA FLP); UEFA Football and Social Responsibility compact course. 3) The programmes for current and former players provide knowledge and tools to facilitate a successful transition to a career off the pitch, e.g. UEFA Executive Master for International Players (UEFA MIP) and UEFA For Players. In addition, the UEFA Academy can develop tailor-made programmes to meet the individual needs of UEFA's member associations.

Knowledge- sharing

Much of the immense knowledge and expertise accumulated by UEFA over its many years of existence has been compiled into a centralised user-friendly online platform, UEFA Academy Online. An invaluable source of football management know-how for the national associations, the platform already contains over 2,000 resources, including best practices and presentations on a vast number of subjects, and is constantly being enriched with new documents and videos.

Below is a summary of the financial support provided so far:

HatTrick I (2004–08) €301.6m

- An initial payment of €1.871m was made to each member association to launch projects developing football at all levels. All projects were subject to the approval of UEFA's HatTrick Committee.
- Four annual solidarity payments of €806,500 were made to each association to support participation in UEFA's youth and amateur competitions.
- A further €645,000 was paid to each association specifically for the construction of mini-pitches. An average of 40 mini-pitches were built by each association, with a total of more than 3,000 mini-pitches being constructed to date.
